Quarterly Fund Manager Review

The fund returned 0.3% over the three months to the end of September 2021, compared to the MSCI AC World Small Cap Index benchmark, which returned 0.9%. The consumer discretionary sector was the biggest detractor to the fund's relative performance, due in the most part to Chinese e-commerce provider Baozun's share price weakness on the back of China's increased regulatory scrutiny of its large internet companies in a bid to achieve 'common prosperity'. Investor sentiment was also dampened after missing Q2 net revenue estimates. Youdao, the Beijing-based software applications developer also faced similar regulatory headwind. The materials sector also eroded relative performance, as several stocks underperformed in a context of supply chain disruptions and a global economic slowdown in September. At the other end, our overweight position in the financials sector contributed some positive relative performance, with the top stock performer being Chailease, the Taiwanese commercial financial services provider. The communication services, industrials and real estate sectors also added some small value to relative performance. The fund's performance this quarter was stunted in the most part by a volatile Asian market environment. China's imposed power shortages and heavily scrutinised property sector, combined with sporadic virus outbreaks across Asia, left markets fragile. Our European holdings also detracted from relative performance, with the German and Swiss renewable companies, Nordex and Meyer Burger technology respectively, facing headwind from the global energy crunch. Strong UK stock selection however was able to offset some of this negative relative performance.
