Quarterly Fund Manager Review

The fund returned 4.2% in the three months to 30 September 2021. The benchmark returned 2.1% in the same period. The global property market has been significantly impacted by the Covid-19 pandemic. The pandemic has also led to long-term changes in the way we live and work, such as the switch to remote working (from home) which will likely result in a reduction in demand for office space in the short term. However, centrally located modern office buildings with good air conditioning and connectivity should see a recovery in demand and higher rents from 2022 onwards as the effects of the pandemic subside. Despite the re-opening of non-essential shops after Covid-19 lockdowns, Town centre retail still faces serious challenges despite the reopening of shops, pubs and restaurants after Covid-19 lockdowns. The number of empty units is likely to increase over the next few years as banks, bookmakers, fashion retailers and travel agents move more of their business online. Moreover, the increase in vacant shops in town centres can deter shoppers from visiting, creating a vicious circle. Shop and shopping centre rental values are expected to fall up until the end of 2023. Whilst lower rents will help retailers' profitability, it will not solve the problem of structural vacancy and a large percentage of town centre retail space will need to be converted to residential, or other uses, or demolished in the future. Demand for industrial space is rising as retailers switch to online trading. Demand for office space has been tepid, a trend which is likely to remain in place until occupiers gain a better understanding of how the so-called hybrid working (partly in the office and partly at home) will work in practice. However, despite the Covid-19 crisis, the UK residential property market has achieved a robust performance in recent months, with the price of homes significantly higher than before the pandemic and strong demand in many parts of the country.
