Quarterly Fund Manager Review

The Fund generated a negative return, net of fees, during the quarter. It was ahead of its benchmark. Information technology stocks retreated during the quarter, and both underweight positioning and security selection in the sector contributed to the Fund's relative performance. This included not owning Apple. In communication services, stock selection in the sector contributed, owing to an overweight position in AT&T and not owning Alphabet. Shares of telecommunications company AT&T performed solidly over the quarter as the company reiterated its full-year earnings guidance and commitment to hitting financial targets for the full year. Not owning Nvidia contributed as the firm faced challenges following the launch of DeepSeek, which raised concerns about chip demand, as well as tariff uncertainty. Conversely, stock selection in the industrials sector detracted for the period in both the electrical equipment and ground transportation subsectors. Stock selection in the real estate sector also weighed on relative performance, including not owning several real-estate investment trusts (REITs) that outperformed during the period. Shares of the electronic components and equipment maker Hubbell were weak over the period after the company reported earnings that surpassed consensus expectations but fell short on sales. The company also offered a more conservative outlook for the full year. Shares of leisure and gaming company Las Vegas Sands were weak for the quarter following results that missed investors' expectations. Some of the company's key properties in Asia have been slow to re-open following a renovation period. During the quarter, we trimmed information technology exposure and added to healthcare, exiting the position in Dell to fund a new position in pharmaceutical name Johnson & Johnson. We moved from a slight overweight in utilities to a slight underweight, trimming positions in Constellation Energy and Dominion Energy following solid price appreciation during our holding period. During the quarter, we also initiated a new position in real estate. This is the first time the Fund has had exposure to this sector in several years. We did this by initiating a new position in Weyerhaeuser, a timber company with solid investment characteristics.
