Quarterly Fund Manager Review

The spending pulse spurred by economies reopening appears to be fading and, although the economic backdrop still seems robust, the market environment has become more volatile. The Fund's losses in emerging market equities were offset by gains in real assets and total return strategies. Fixed income was relatively flat, with declines in government bonds cancelling the gains from high yield debt. Equity losses came mainly from emerging markets, where vaccinations are taking longer to catch up with developed markets. The US recovery appears to be on track, with resilient consumer spending leading to equity market gains early in the quarter. However, towards the end of the quarter these gains were pared back due to tapering worries. Near-term inflation fears, which had previously weighed on markets, have now moderated to an extent as global economic growth appears to have passed peak levels. Real asset gains came predominantly from commodities. Demand from the economic recovery, combined with global trade and logistics bottlenecks, helped drive prices higher. Infrastructure holdings were a small positive during the quarter. Total return strategies delivered gains over the quarter. In particular, our defensive relative value trades in currencies performed well. Gains were also made in trades designed to benefit in range bound equity markets.
