Quarterly manager commentary

Market Update

In the first quarter of 2025, global share markets saw heightened volatility, driven by uncertainty around US trade and foreign policies, and a growing risk of recession.

European share markets performed better than their US counterparts, helped by increased government spending in some regions. However, the latter part of the quarter saw most major equity markets take a hit, with concerns mounting over escalating tariff hikes. Emerging markets showed some strength, propped up by large-cap performance, though growth-sensitive sectors did experience some weakness.

The US market faced headwinds, with a rotation towards defensive sectors like value, quality, and yield. This was a shift away from the momentum-driven gains of 2024. The tech sector, previously a strong performer, experienced a downturn. Concerns about the potential impact on consumer spending also weighed on the market.

Despite positive local inflation and sentiment figures, a consumer-friendly 2025-26 Budget, and the first Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) cash rate cut since late 2020, the Aussie share market continued to struggle, focusing more on the uncertainty created by the Trump Administration's tariff policy.

Portfolio Update

The portfolio delivered a return of 1.43% over the March quarter. International shares were the strongest contributors to performance over the quarter, with your allocations to global listed infrastructure and value-oriented companies standing out. Government bond exposures also delivered solid returns despite market volatility, while your investments in the share market more broadly encountered some challenges. Over the year, international shares were the primary driver of absolute performance, with the Epoch Global Equity Shareholder Yield (Unhedged) Fund – which focuses on value-oriented, income-paying companies – being a key contributor to portfolio returns and income generation.

Portfolio changes during the quarter:

We remain comfortable with the current structure of your portfolio. Consequently, no changes have been made this quarter.

Market Outlook

The beginning of 2025 has brought renewed market uncertainty, largely driven by the US government's shifting trade policy. Tariffs remain high, and the lack of clarity around future policy has weighed on business confidence and investor sentiment.

US bonds and the dollar have struggled, reflecting concerns about inflation, capital flows, and the broader economic outlook. Business activity indicators and consumer confidence are weakening, while the Federal Reserve remains focused on controlling inflation - though this may change if unemployment starts to rise.

Despite these headwinds, equity markets are being supported by expectations of ongoing policy support. However, the risk of a slowdown or recession remains, particularly if trade tensions continue or central banks delay action.

In this environment, maintaining a diversified portfolio is key. Assets such as government bonds and global listed infrastructure can help cushion volatility, while undervalued segments, such as global listed property, offer longer-term growth potential once conditions improve.
