¹ The managed portfolio performance represents total return for the periods. Returns have been calculated using the time-weighted method, they assume distributions are reinvested and are after investment management fees and indirect costs. Total and growth returns include accrued distributions, while income return includes paid distributions only. Returns do not take into account tax payable. Individual client returns may vary based on the contributions, withdrawals, and timing differences within the managed portfolio

Quarterly manager commentary

Market Update

News flow in the final quarter of 2024 was dominated by the machinations of the U.S Presidential election, which ultimately resulted in a clean sweep (of the House, Senate and Presidency) for Donald Trump and the Republican party. For many, Trump's re-election to the White House may have come as a shock, particularly given uncertainty around the possible implications of his policies regarding tariffs and immigration, not to mention his administration's potential involvement in geopolitical issues, more broadly.

In a financial markets sense, however, the resounding success of his victory initially propelled the U.S. sharemarket, with investors taking confidence that tax cuts and deregulation will likely support corporate profitability.

Bond and currency markets felt the so called 'Trump trade' effect too, with U.S. bond yields rising sharply (and the U.S. dollar soaring) in anticipation of higher interest rates being required to curb economic growth, compensate for increased spending and keep inflation under control, under a Trump presidency. This theme was reinforced late in the quarter, with the Federal Reserve signalling a slowing pace of interest rate cuts, in recognition of robust economic activity.

Portfolio Update

The strong performance of most sharemarkets has flowed through into solid portfolio returns, on a 12-month view. That said, the portfolio's performance continues to trail its benchmark across key timeframes. This is primarily as a result of our positioning in Australian equities, and notably within the 'big 4' banks, where we are 'underweight'. Not owning Commonwealth Bank alone accounts for more than half of the difference between the return from the Australian equities' component of the portfolio, and that of the Australian index. While International equities were performed well, the asset class underperformed, a weaker AUD/USD impacted the currency hedged Betashares Global Shares ETF.

Portfolio changes during the quarter:

In this regard, it is worth highlighting a recent trade that we made on the portfolio, which saw us sell Westpac Banking Corp, with the proceeds being reinvested across a range of existing holdings, particularly in the health care sector. The rationale behind this is that Westpac has simply become too expensive, in our view. While we appreciate that being so different to the index may make some uncomfortable, this is very much the Elston active approach at work, using our investment philosophy and portfolio guardrails to mitigate the overconcentration risk in the asset class and position the portfolio toward more attractively priced, quality companies (and away from those that present the elevated risk of loss).

There were a few tactical asset allocation adjustment in the quarter, an increase to International Equities and Global Listed Property funded by a reduction from Cash. While valuations are elevated, International equities are supported by attractive earnings growth which is broadening out across sector and region in 2025. With the onset of interest rates cuts (at least overseas) occurring, Listed Property is likely to benefit from lower interest costs, more stable property values and improved investor sentiment towards the sector.

Market Outlook

We maintain a balanced view looking forward. On one hand, it continues to be an uncertain investment environment – arguably increasingly so following Trump's election, given that many questions remain around the magnitude and timing of policy implementation. Perhaps the biggest challenge (and what stops us from adopting a higher weighting to growth assets) is in terms of valuations, whereby the U.S. and Australian markets, at an index level, look to be pricing in little room for error. Valuations in the U.S. market are supported to an extent by earnings growth (which may improve further under a Trump presidency). Still, investors appear to be becoming increasingly complacent, buoyed by expectations of continued 'American exceptionalism' that would see U.S. economic and sharemarket outperformance into the future. Time will tell if this confidence is misplaced, but we continue to find attractively priced opportunities to invest in. In this regard, we believe active management will be key to building genuinely diversified portfolios that are robust and resilient to withstand whatever the future may hold.
