Quarterly manager commentary

Market Update

Share markets rallied strongly over the March quarter, buoyed by robust economic data and expectations for interest rate cuts in the latter half of 2024.

The Australian share market posted solid gains during the quarter, driven by a better-than-expected domestic reporting season. However, these gains were eclipsed by global markets as lower iron ore prices weighed down the local share market. The Information Technology sector was the standout performer, while Listed Property shares, such as Goodman Group, benefited from improved investor sentiment and having been previously oversold. Australian banks also rose over the quarter thanks to a combination of a resilient economy, signs of a peak in interest rates, and the cautious positioning of investors.

Global shares continued their momentum from last year, with most major share markets reaching record highs. Markets were driven by strong economic data, solid company earnings results, and broad-based optimism that major central banks were still on track to deliver interest rate cuts in 2024. The returns from the so-called "Magnificent Seven"US tech giants were more divergent, with the likes of Nvidia, Meta, and Amazon leading the charge. In contrast, Tesla and Apple struggled off the back of weaker demand for their products.

The head of the RBA mentioned that recent data shows progress in controlling inflation yet decided to keep interest rates steady at 4.35%, with their focus shifting towards considering cutting rates later in the year.

Portfolio Update

The portfolio delivered a return of 6.81% over the past quarter.

International Shares were the strongest performer over the quarter, while Australian Shares also produced robust returns. Your Bond exposures rebounded during the quarter, whereas your diversifying Alternatives strategies faced challenges. Over the year, it was a similar story with International Shares being the key driver of performance.

Market Outlook

The "soft-landing" scenario remains our base case, where interest rates are high enough to curb inflation without causing a major recession or a meaningful spike in unemployment. However, economic growth remaining above trend and the durability of household and business savings have led to the prospect of higher rates for a longer period than expected re-emerging as a key risk, rather than a recession. Whilst your portfolios are broadly positioned for our base case, we have also embedded resilience in them, through an increased focus on higher quality assets and targeting areas of the market that we believe are undervalued, such as global smaller companies.

During the quarter, changes were made to your portfolio to better align with this perspective. One such adjustment involved increasing the exposure of your global shares allocation to fluctuations in the Australian Dollar (AUD). The benefit of this adjustment is that if a "higher-for-longer" or recessionary scenario play out, the AUD is likely to fall, therefore your investments in global shares tend to appreciate, helping spread your portfolio risk and keep your long-term returns steady.
