Quarterly manager commentary

Market Update

The third quarter of 2024 painted a picture of resilience amid ongoing uncertainties. Global markets navigated a complex landscape, driven by the push and pull of inflation concerns, interest rate speculations, and geopolitical tensions.

Tech stocks, particularly in the semiconductor space, led the charge, though their lofty valuations raised eyebrows. Central banks maintained their cautious stance, balancing inflation control with growth support. The labor market showed signs of cooling but remained surprisingly robust, lending credence to the "soft landing" narrative.

In fixed income, yields fluctuated as investors reassessed rate cut expectations. Commodities presented a mixed bag, with energy prices particularly volatile due to geopolitical factors and demand shifts.

Emerging markets offered varied opportunities, while European markets grappled with sluggish growth and persistent inflation. Asian markets, notably Japan, attracted increased international interest.

The quarter highlighted divergent sector performance. Growth and value stocks showed similar overall returns, but with significant variations based on sector and regional allocations. Small caps and certain cyclical sectors hinted at a potential rotation away from mega-cap tech dominance.

Portfolio Update

Over the third quarter of 2024, the portfolio navigated through volatile market conditions, with varied performance across asset classes and funds.

July saw Property & Infrastructure leading gains while Cash lagged. Security selection added value, with the Langdon Global Smaller Companies Fund being the largest outperformer and the L1 Capital Catalyst Fund underperforming. Asset allocation negatively impacted returns, primarily due to the portfolio's overweight to Fixed Interest. International equities had a positive month, with the Langdon Global Smaller Companies Fund and Platinum Japan Fund performing well. Among Australian equity funds, the Eley Griffiths Group Emerging Companies Fund showed strength. Fixed interest underperformed benchmarks, with the US Treasury Bond ETF and Macquarie True Index Australian Fixed Interest Fund leading the sector.

August brought a shift in performance, with Property & Infrastructure maintaining its lead while International Equities struggled. Security selection subtracted value this month, as the VanEck S&P/ASX MidCap ETF outperformed and the Vanguard Global Value Equity Active ETF underperformed. Asset allocation negatively contributed, mainly due to the underweight in Property & Infrastructure. International equities faced challenges, though the Vanguard FTSE All World Ex-US ETF and iShares MSCI Japan ETF showed resilience. In Australian equities, the VanEck S&P/ASX MidCap ETF and Macquarie Core Australian Equity Active ETF delivered modest gains. Fixed interest continued to underperform benchmarks, with the US Treasury Bond ETF and Macquarie True Index Australian Fixed Interest Fund leading the way.

September saw a notable shift with Property & Infrastructure taking the lead and Cash lagging. Security selection added value, as the Vanguard Emerging Market Shares Index Fund outperformed while the Macquarie Hedged Index Global Infrastructure Securities Fund underperformed. International equities had a mixed month, with the Vanguard Emerging Market Shares Index Fund and Vanguard FTSE All World Ex-US ETF performing relatively better. Australian equity funds showed strength, particularly the Yarra Australian Smaller Companies and Macquarie Core Australian Equity Active ETF. Fixed interest performance remained subdued, with the Yarra Enhanced Income Fund and Artesian Corporate Bond Fund delivering the best returns within the asset class.

Portfolio changes during the quarter:

The InvestSense diversified portfolios underwent some manager changes, primarily in Australian and International equities, aimed at reducing overall fees and optimizing exposures. In Australian equities, Vanguard Index is being replaced with Macquarie's Core Australian Equity Active ETF, while VanEck MidCap ETF is introduced to increase mid-cap exposure. Small cap exposure shifts to Yarra Australian Smaller Companies.

Internationally, Vanguard International Index is replaced with separate US and All World Ex-US ETFs, allowing for regional tilts. BetaShares Nasdaq 100 and Vanguard Global Value Equity Active ETFs are added to balance growth and value exposures. Underperforming Platinum Japan has been replaced with iShares MSCI Japan ETF. The fixed interest composition remains largely unchanged.

Market Outlook

Looking ahead, the market landscape appears cautiously optimistic, though challenges remain. The global economy seems to be inching towards a soft landing, but the path is far from certain.

Central bank policies will continue to be a key focus. While there's an expectation of a shift towards a more dovish stance, the timing and magnitude of potential rate cuts remain unclear. Market participants will closely monitor economic releases for signs of sustained disinflation that could prompt central banks to ease their policies.

The tech sector, particularly in AI and semiconductors, is likely to remain in the spotlight. However, increased scrutiny on valuations could lead to volatility and potential sector rotations. Investors may need to reassess their expectations for this high-flying sector.

Geopolitical risks continue to be a wild card. With ongoing tensions in various regions and the upcoming U.S. presidential election, markets could face unexpected turbulence. Geographic diversification may help mitigate these risks.

In fixed income, a more stable interest rate environment could renew interest in bonds. High-quality corporate and government securities may see increased demand as investors seek to balance their portfolios.

Emerging markets and small-caps present interesting opportunities, with many quality companies trading at attractive valuations. However, selectivity will be key, as risks vary significantly across different regions and companies.

Commodities and real assets may continue to play an important role as hedges against inflation and geopolitical uncertainties, though performance is likely to vary across different classes.

Overall, while the economic backdrop appears more stable, investors should remain prepared for potential volatility. Diversification across asset classes, geographies, and market capitalizations remains prudent. As the market environment becomes more nuanced, active management and careful security selection may become increasingly important.
