<sup>1</sup> The managed portfolio performance represents total return for the periods. Returns have been calculated using the time-weighted method, they assume distributions are reinvested and are after investment management fees and indirect costs. Total and growth returns include accrued distributions, while income return includes paid distributions only. Returns do not take into account tax payable. Individual client returns may vary based on the contributions, withdrawals, and timing differences within the managed portfolio

Quarterly manager commentary

Market Update

The final quarter of 2023 proved to be a buoyant period, with a significant shift in U.S. interest rate policy underpinning a marked improvement in investor confidence. Having reiterated their expectations for “higher for longer” interest rates in the U.S. as recently as three months ago (which astute readers may recall was behind much of the market weakness at the close of the third quarter), the U.S. Federal Reserve firstly passed on the opportunity to raise interest rates further, before signalling that there may, in fact, be meaningful interest rate cuts in 2024. With inflation moderating, it seems that ‘the Fed’ is now turning its attention to the impact of previous interest rate hikes on economic growth. Whether this “pivot” turns out to be premature or not, time will tell. Nonetheless, investors have move quickly to trumpet the return of more supportive monetary policy.

Portfolio update

Against this backdrop, Australian and global sharemarkets (in aggregate) enjoyed a solid quarter to round out what has been an impressive year (made even more remarkable when considering the escalation in Middle Eastern tensions in the fourth quarter). In part, this reflects expectations of a more favourable business environment, with falling inflation and a lower cost of debt likely to improve corporate bottom lines. But investors also seem willing to pay more for future earnings now too, given the perception of there being less risk present, not to mention the implied guarantee that Central Banks have once again got their back, should economic conditions deteriorate from here. Defying the traditional diversification relationship, bonds also delivered strong returns (especially longer-dated bonds) as bond yields tumbled, while other interest rate sensitive asset classes like listed property and listed infrastructure also did well, over the quarter.

It's worth highlighting that Elston has maintained a fairly defensive portfolio positioning across 2023, primarily holding a lower weighting to growth assets, like shares, and holding a higher allocation to bonds, given our expectation of a more challenging economic outlook and the increasing risk of loss posed in certain sharemarkets. In what ultimately proved to be a good year for financial markets, this has seen shorter-term portfolio returns lag the investment objective, although they remain solid in an absolute sense (and, more importantly, strong over the longer-term).

Market Outlook

Nonetheless, we believe that this portfolio positioning remains generally prudent. Granted, it does feel better to be more fully invested now, to the extent that a major headwind (i.e., interest rates) appears to have turned into a tailwind. However, we are not necessarily out of the woods, yet. While economic data has been relatively resilient up until this point, growth is likely to be more subdued moving forward. Further, in the Fed's own words, “inflation is still too high, the ongoing progress in bringing it down is not assured, and the path forward is uncertain”. This makes the timing and magnitude of any interest rate cuts unclear, and certainly far from guaranteed. Geopolitical risks, too, remain elevated, noting that the U.S. presidential election cycle is also about to begin in earnest. This all sets the stage for ongoing volatility into 2024, particularly given investor exuberance in driving sharemarkets higher in the final quarter of 2023. That said, opportunities do remain for disciplined investors like ourselves, with the portfolio continuing to invest in a range of assets and strategies, which we believe are well positioned to deliver future long-term returns to the portfolio.
