COMMENTARY

The UK electorate may have experienced a sense of déjà vu on 30th October when the first Labour Budget since 2010 was delivered by Chancellor Rachel Reeves. Whilst the parlous state of public finances, and the need for tough action, had been repeatedly cited, many were still surprised by the size and scope of the £40bn tax grab. This left some feeling that Labour was somewhat disingenuous when seeking election and, for those that have a long memory, the overall package felt like an old-fashioned Labour "tax and spend budget".

On an equally disconcerting note, there does not seem to be any significant near-term growth initiatives and there are also question marks whether the significant additional funding for essential services, such as NHS, will do much more than pay for the inflation busting (but well-deserved) pay rises that the Government has granted since being elected. This, combined with the Chancellor rewriting the rule book so that she can borrow an extra £50bn has unnerved investment markets who have revised upwards long-term inflation expectations and reduced downwards expectation for interest rate cuts, which has been expressed through weakness in GBP and a rise in gilt yields.

The Ravenscroft Global Balanced USD fund delivered a return of -1.6% in October taking the year-to-date return to +6.7%. All importantly this year returns remain ahead of cash rates and the prevailing rate of inflation.

There have been no changes to the Fund holdings this month. However, our Healthcare review continues and will result in some changes being implemented, prior to year-end. We have decided upon the blend of funds to be used, and their respective weightings within the Balanced strategy but are waiting, for any fallout from the American election and for any market reaction to the result before we implement, as it will involve a modest addition of risk through an increased exposure to equity markets.
